WHEELING, FEBRUARY 16, 1899.

Tribute to the Dead.

To-day will be laid to rest the mortal remains of one whose sudden departure from this life has caused profound regret and grief to thousands of his fellow citizens, who held him in high esteem for the great services he performed for the state and its people, for his exalted character, and for the career the history of which will be the most lasting monument to his memory. Those who will meet to participate in the last rites, and pay silent tribute, will represent but a small proportion of the great number in this commonwealth, who owe him such a debt of gratitude, and of those who revere his memory in other states of this great Union.

But nowhere will the tender tributes be more heartfelt, the sorrow be more sincere, the regrets more touching than here, where will be gathered together his friends and neighbors of almost a life-time, where the events occurred which won him the hearts of the people, and who, through the years that followed never lost their regard for him; but ever held him as worthy of all honor, and trusted him as a safe counselor—an example for all men, and particularly young men to follow. Of his private life, as well as of his public life, there was but one sentiment among the people, and in this hour that sentiment will prevail among those who pay tribute at the bier, rendering their honors the more touching and significant.

When all that is mortal of Archibald W. Campbell is laid away to-day these memories will not be buried with him. They will live and he will live in the hearts of those who knew him best and among whom he spent his splendid life.

Reviving a Dead Canard.

The Register, in commenting on the Intelligencer's reminder of certain charges that were made against the Republican leaders in this state in connection with the so-called West Virginia deferred certificates, otherwise the "Virginia debt question," and the absurd story about a campaign caucus at Parkersburg deciding to take up the matter, when no such subject was ever mentioned in that caucus, simply repeats the old falsehood, which has been exploded several times. It reiterates all the foolishness, which it revives by publishing a letter from Mr. R. P. Chew, of Jefferson county, in support of a petition to be presented to the legislature, on behalf of the commission representing the certificate-holding syndicate, and sticks to it that it is a Republican scheme, and that "Mr. Elkins' New York bank holds a bunch of these certificates."

That is all. Simple, unsupported assertions, that were exploded months ago. But there are strange and noticeable admissions. First, the Register utterly neglects to name the distinguished gentlemen who compose the committee issuing the petition, and to give their political affiliations. It so happens that the majority of the men whose names are signed are leading Democrats, including Mr. Chew himself. Also, the Register, as on other occasions, fails to give the name of "Mr. Elkins' New York bank." Has the senator a New York bank? If so, why doesn't the Register locate it? If the Register knows so much about Mr. Elkins' private investments and his ownership of a New York bank let it come out with the information, and also give its source of information as to what the bank has in its vaults. This absurd falsehood is more amusing than it is harmful.

Maine Victims Remembered.

The observance of the anniversary of the blowing up of the battleship Maine, which occurred just a year ago yesterday, occurred in Havana, being conducted by the Americans. Owing to the refusal of Mr. Santander, bishop of Havana to permit Rev. Thomas Sherman to say prayers in the cemetery where the victims of that terrible outrage lie, the ceremonies were deprived of their religious character to a great extent, and limited to the military and naval ceremony, the decorations of the neglected graves by the ladies of Havana, and address and dirges by the bands.

Considering all things and circumstances the celebration of the day was a fitting testimonial to the brave sailors who forfeited their lives through Spanish treachery while in a then Spanish port on a peaceful mission. It was their sudden and unlooked for death which precipitated the war, which deprived Spain of about all the possessions she had outside of the peninsula, wrecked her prestige among the nations, freed struggling humanity from her tyrannical power, and struck a decisive blow toward the end of her career as a potent factor, the degeneracy of which has been the chief feature of her history for centuries.

While all the Nation mourns for these martyrs it has the satisfaction of knowing that the hand of Providence was with their country in the events which followed to the undoing of the country responsible for that tragedy.

In the event of yesterday the hearts of the American people were with their representatives at Havana who paid the touching tribute to the memory of these dead sailors. We are told in the dispatches that the graves were sadly neglected by the Spaniards, and are now simply marked by an iron cross, on which is inscribed the words, "Victims of the Maine." If it is not the intention of the government to bring the remains of the victims to their native soil to be placed in some national cemetery to be cared for always under the flag for which they died, then those graves at Havana should be marked by a monument fittingly inscribed and representative of the respect the American people have for its dead heroes.

The people, however, would prefer that they be brought to their own soil, for Cuba is not to be a possession of the United States, and the victims of the Maine deserve that their resting place should be under a monument in their own country. The remains of our heroes who have fallen in battle, or as a result of disease in Cuba, in Porto Rico and the faraway Philippines, cannot all be returned. For many reasons, which cannot be detailed it would be impossible, but let the monuments be built just the same in this country, and like those erected to other heroes of previous wars, they will be the shrines where American citizens may annually pay tribute to the memories and the deeds of their dead.

Coffee a Natural Beverage.

The Pittsburgh Times has an editorial on the increased use of coffee in this country, and the good it is doing at this time, which is timely and truthful, and suggests an idea which has grown upon many of our people of late years. Our contemporary remarks the growing tendency to turn to hot coffee on the days when cold weather or a scarcity of time makes a beverage or a quick lunch desirable.

This is true, and has been particularly notable in the long stormy season which we have been experiencing, for it is a matter of comment that during this period the amount of hot coffee consumed is beyond precedent. In the large cities, the Times notes, charitable people have supplied coffee to storm-bound pedestrians; street car lines have provided coffee for their employees; railroads have given coffee by the tubful to their men battling with the elements, while belated passengers at stations have warmed up on hot coffee. Alcoholic stimulants have taken a back seat and hot coffee reigns supreme.

Quoting the Times literally, we find the following sentiments, which all who have been close observers will endorse as expressing absolute facts:
Years ago our fathers, had they been forced to deal with such a storm, would have fortified themselves with a hot Scotch, or a punch. Alcohol was regarded as a supplier of heat. Now the heat is found in sufficient quantity in the boiling water of the coffee, and the stimulant afforded by the drink is so small as to be unworthy of consideration.

There are no evil after-effects from the ordinate use of coffee. Possibly the temperance idea of supplanting the ale house with the coffee house is bearing some fruit, but it is certain that coffee drinking in emergency cases is increasing, and that the use of alcoholic liquors for such purposes is falling off.

The student of current questions may draw such inferences as he cares to, or forecast such effects as seem likely. But the fact remains. Coffee is getting to be the national beverage. The United States drinks annually $35,000,000 pounds of coffee, or more than all of Europe, our average being ten pounds to the individual.

This is worth thinking about. Coffee is worth thinking about. Coffee as a cold weather drink is winning its way.

It is of great benefit, and does less harm, while bringing the desired effect, than any other beverage. It is better for the people and better for the coffee trade.

The Stricken South.

The effects of the unprecedented cold wave in the south will be of a disastrous nature, for it means almost the total destruction of early crops of the principal products of the southern states. In Florida, the unprecedented zero temperature has been reached, which means immense losses to the people and investors in that state in the orange and other semi-tropical fruit business. In Texas about everything in the early agricultural lines is practically ruined, vegetables alone damaged to the amount of a million, and the cattle in that great grazing state are in a horrible condition, and dying by the thousands. Throughout the southern states the story is pretty much the same. This condition of affairs, while it will affect the south materially most directly, will necessarily also affect the markets in the northern states in the early part of the season, and cause high prices in everything we have been accustomed to receive from southern states.

The weather has sadly interfered with the Pennsylvania legislature. Many members who went to their homes last Saturday have been unable to return, and matters with reference to the senatorial situation are more confused than ever. There were but twenty votes cast Tuesday for senator, of which Quay received seventeen. If Quay could get that proportion in a full session—but he never will, and what's the use of talking about it?

The decided change for the better yesterday in the weather was welcomed locally. The warmer temperature relieved the suffering and inconvenience in many a home, and the revival in the retail business was noticeable. With the change, however, is some anxiety less a sudden thaw or rain might cause high water. There is no immediate danger and it will be well for all to be more hopeful and avoid unnecessary fears.

A Nice Distinction.

Ex-Senator Everts hit off Mr. Stewart's peculiarities in a little story that he told at a dinner given in honor of Senator Spooner when the latter was leaving public life six years ago. After the coffee was served one after another of his colleagues arose and pronounced a eulogy. When Mr. Stewart's turn came he said that while Spooner was a good fellow he was all wrong on finances, and proceeded to repeat the old speech he had made so many times in the senate.

Senator Everts who next took the floor, said that Stewart reminded him of a man he had met in an insane asylum one time when he was acting as a member of a board of visitors. The superintendent told them that they must say cheerful things to the patients, and therefore when he saw a lunatic sitting astride of a table beating it with a whip and pretending to drive it with a pair of string lines he walked up to him and said: "That's a fine hobby you have there, my friend."
"It isn't a hobby," answered the lunatic: "It's a horse."
"What's the difference between a horse and a hobby?" suggested Mr. Everts. The lunatic turned on him with an air of supreme contempt, and remarked: "You blank fool, anybody can get off a horse, but nobody ever got off a hobby."—Chicago Record.

FREAKISH PHRASES.

Some of the Things That Ticked a Vienna Editor.
All newspaper offices could make a choice collection of freakish phrases if they chose. Once in a while one gets into print, but most of them amuse only the copy readers. Here's a few which were stopped in the editorial rooms of a Vienna newspaper:
The post-mortem examination showed that the unfortunate girl was a teacher's daughter.
When the housemaid entered the bedroom at the usual hour she found her master already a corpse. Soon afterward he withdrew altogether from the political arena.
The gas lamps, which at this time were not yet lighted, made the streets appear still darker.

DETERMINED WOMEN

Who Would not be Rescued When the House was on Fire.

New York Sun: There was a fire in the pawnshop of Joseph Fischer, at 110 East Houston street, last night, and the firemen found the fire plugs frozen. The fire seemed to be gaining considerable headway. On the third floor, over the shop, lives the owner of the house, Miss Dellarifa Richardson, daughter of the late Joseph Richardson, builder of the "Spite House." With her lives, or did live, her cousin, Miss Emily Emmett. The women did not appear on the street and Policemen Woodbridge and Clark, of the Eldridge street station, ran upstairs. They knocked and a woman fully dressed, opened the door. The room was full of smoke.
"Close the door," said she, sharply. "It is so cold in here now my canaries will be frozen to death."
"The house is on fire!" shouted the policeman. "Hurry up and come out."
"What? And leave my birds? Never!" she said.
"Bring them along with you, but hurry up or you can't get out!" yelled the policeman.
"They'd freeze outside. I won't go a step," she announced decisively. "That's all."
Policeman Woodbridge grabbed her and began to carry her downstairs. She struggled violently, and just before they reached the street door she succeeded in breaking away. She ran back up the stairs to her rooms, the policeman following. She entered the room and seized a bird cage. Woodbridge picked her up again and carried her and her birds to the street, where she lectured him for endangering the life of her birds.
"Where's Miss Richardson?" asked Woodbridge.
"She's upstairs in bed asleep," replied the other woman. "I hope you won't bring her into this cold. It would kill her."
Woodbridge ran upstairs again and went through the rooms until he came to a locked door. He knocked and a woman's voice demanded to know what was wanted.
"Who's there?" asked Woodbridge.
"Dellarifa Richardson," was the reply.
"Well the house is on fire!" shouted Woodbridge. "Don't wait to dress, but hurry out, if you want to escape."
"Thank you kindly," replied the voice, "but I prefer to stay right here in bed."
"But the house is on fire," yelled Woodbridge.
"Let it burn," was the calm reply.
"You'll burn, too," said Woodbridge, savagely, for he was beginning to lose his temper.
"I'd sooner do it than be seen on the street in my nightgown," said the voice. "Besides, it's warm here and cold outside."
Woodbridge was about to kick in the door when Policeman Clark ran upstairs and told him that the fire was under control.
"I hope you'll go away now and leave me alone," called out Miss Richardson, and Woodbridge departed. The woman who was rescued by main strength wouldn't tell what her name was. The police put her down as Dellarifa Richardson's sister.

Artistic Crying.

"Very few women know how to cry properly," said a cold-blooded observer, "but if they realized how potent tears are as a weapon they would spare no pains in learning to shed them gracefully. As a rule, brunettes cry much better than blondes. I call to mind, for instance, a pretty little woman who was a litigant in court some years ago, and who wept when a certain portion of the testimony was reached. As the critical moment approached her eyes began to swim. They seemed to grow larger and darker, and they took on a wistful and appealing look that made every man in the jury box feel as if he wanted to climb right out and hit the plaintiff with a club. Her lips were quivering, and presently two great tears rolled softly down her cheeks. That settled it. I was foreman of the jury, and we were exactly a minute and a half in giving her a verdict. Now, if that had happened to some other woman, equally worthy, but of lighter complexion, the chances are her nose would have turned pink and her eyes would have assumed a slightly inflamed appearance that would have been—er—very damaging to her cause. If she had sniffled, as they usually do, I can't say what the result might have been. A woman who can cry artistically can have anything she wants. I'm surprised it ain't taught, like Delsarte movements."

Only a Song.

Love says not much, but says it, oh, so well.
We cannot tell
What is the meaning of its secret spell.
It is a charming ditty
Is like the murmur of a sounding shell,
Heard in the pauses of the ocean's swell,
In beauty's oft-recurring parallel.

Dr. Ryers recognizes the fact that there are hundreds, yes, thousands of people suffering from catarrh in its different forms—nasal, catarrh of the throat, catarrh of the bronchial tubes, catarrh of the stomach, etc., who have not the means to obtain relief. He has therefore organized a specialist with sufficient frequency to receive benefit from local treatment. By the aid of this instrument

The vaporizer furnishes at home efficient application of the medicated air or vapor in catarrh of the nose, throat, lungs, etc., asthma, etc. It saves frequent and expensive visits to the office.

The busy man or woman can receive at home, twice daily, the same efficient application of the medicated air or vapor as at the specialist's office.

All patients who make application during the month of February will receive one month's treatment and medicine absolutely without pay or compensation of any kind. Patients can be treated with perfect success by the aid of this simple, blank diagnosis and patient's report sheet, on application.
